

New E. coli sicknesses declining

June 14 2011

Two men dressed up as nuns pass a table with vegetables prepared for a cucumber and tomato eating contest in front of the Brandenburg Gate in Berlin, Germany, Tuesday, June 14, 2011. Kati Brunne, not in photo, won the contest which was organized by the German Vegetarian Association. (AP Photo/Michael Sohn)

(AP) -- Germany's national disease control center says the number of new cases of E. coli illness being reported has slowed to a trickle.

The Robert Koch Institute said Tuesday that a total of 3,235 people in Germany have been reported ill, only seven more than the previous day.

A total of 36 people - 35 in Germany and one in Sweden - have died in what has been the deadliest outbreak of E. coli ever.

German authorities have narrowed the source of the outbreak to vegetable sprouts from a farm in the north of the country.

They are warning consumers against eating any vegetable sprouts until they determine whether the farm received tainted seeds - meaning other farms could also be affected - or whether the cause was a hygienic problem at the farm itself.

©2011 The Associated Press. All rights reserved. This material may not be published, broadcast, rewritten or redistributed.

Citation: New E. coli sicknesses declining (2011, June 14) retrieved 26 February 2023 from <https://medicalxpress.com/news/2011-06-coli-sicknesses-declining.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.