France on Tuesday reported 531 deaths from COVID-19 in 24 hours as the number of people in hospital and intensive care continued to decline.

The daily tally—387 deaths in hospital and 144 in nursing homes—brought France's total epidemic death toll to 20,796, top health official Jerome Salomon told reporters.

There were 30,106 infected people in hospital, he said—a daily decline of 478 in an encouraging downward trend.

There were also 250 fewer people in intensive care—a crucial marker of epidemic decline—for a total of 5,433, Salomon said. This represented the 13th day of decline in a row.

The total tally included 12,900 people who died in hospital and 7,896 in old age and other care homes.

Salomon said the epidemic remained active in France, adding "we must remain fully mobilised."
