

Czechs extend state of emergency as COVID spreads again

10 December 2020

Ministers have come under fire over the measures described as chaotic by critics as they often do not match the government's five-tier epidemic system introduced in November.

On Wednesday, several pubs across the country rebelled against the measures, staying open after 8pm despite the risk of a hefty fine.

The Czech Republic saw a massive spike in COVID-19 cases earlier in autumn with daily increases of around 15,000 cases, and it has been struggling to flatten the growth curve ever since.

© 2020 AFP

Credit: CC0 Public Domain

The Czech government extended a state of emergency until December 23 on Thursday as the number of COVID-19 infections in the EU member started to surge again.

The Czech Republic registered 6,402 new cases on Wednesday, the fastest growth since November 19, taking the country's total tally since March to 563,333 cases and 9,226 deaths.

"If the situation keeps worsening, we may have to tighten the measures again on Monday," Health Minister Jan Blatny told reporters.

The state of emergency makes decision-making easier for the government at the time of crisis.

The government eased some restrictions a week ago when it reopened restaurants and bars, small shops, museums and galleries and raised the limit on gatherings.

But it has since cut back opening hours for restaurants, which must close at 8pm as of Wednesday.

APA citation: Czechs extend state of emergency as COVID spreads again (2020, December 10) retrieved 26 April 2021 from
<https://medicalxpress.com/news/2020-12-czechs-state-emergency-covid.html>

This document is subject to copyright. Apart from any fair dealing for the purpose of private study or research, no part may be reproduced without the written permission. The content is provided for information purposes only.